

BLUE EYES DREW SMOKER

What Happened at the Sign Stand When a Pretty Girl Seemed Miss.

A gray-haired man who wore a skull cap had operated the sign and news stand for years. An air of quiet and peace, sometimes the ominous forerunner of commercial disaster, had lately hung over the place.

One day there was a change. Even from across the street it could be discerned that a metamorphosis had taken place. An air of brightness and business surrounded the old news stand. On closer investigation it was found that the outside had been repainted and an attractive window display arranged. A new name had been painted in gold letters across the window. She was a vision in a light blue, carefully tailored dress, big blue eyes and a mop of blonde hair arranged in an intricate but extremely attractive pattern. A bystander continued to gaze surreptitiously at the apparition under the pretense of looking at some magazine fastened in the window. When the vision started toward him he was too startled to retreat. The door opened and a soft voice inquired if he would not come in and look at the better things that were on display inside. He went in, although he wanted neither magazines nor cigars. Inside there was an unexpected air of order and business. Under the spell of the blue eyes and the blonde hair the man bought two two-for-quarter cigars, although he had always found 5-cent ones perfectly satisfactory before, and a 2-cent magazine that he had never seen before and in which he was not at all interested.

Soon others discovered a new interest in cigars and magazines. Business grew better with each day. A group of young fellows who spent money as well as talked constantly about the place, and its presiding genius served all with impartiality. Business was good. Another chapter, however, remained to be added to a story which properly should end here. The young woman proprietor was missing one day and a young man was in her place. He was one of the young men who had hung faithfully about the place for some time preceding. He seems now to be a permanent fixture at the old stand. Occasionally the young woman relieves him for an afternoon, and sometimes she comes just before closing time, and they go away together, but the young man seems to be directing the business. And business is not so good now.—Indianapolis News.

Saturday Will Be "Children's Day"

It is neither extravagant nor expensive for the mother who is smartly dressed to dress her children equally smart. The question of dress has so much to do with the kiddies' standing particularly in school that good clothes are not an extravagance but a well-repaid investment. At Brandeis Stores mothers can provide their children with a wardrobe that will be a credit to them at very modest cost.
